8 MOST DANGEROUS PLANTS

Many common plants, both in the house and in the yard, can be toxic to our pets. Some plants only cause mild stomach upset, while others can be poisonous. And, some plants are safe for some species while deadly for others.

Rhododendrons, azaleas, laurels and Japanese pieris are highly toxic to all species and deserve extra caution.

Sago palms can cause liver failure and death in dogs and cats. All parts of the plant are toxic, with the seeds having the highest concentration of toxin. One seed can kill a dog within 24 hours.

Oleander, foxglove and lily of the valley can slow the heartbeat and even stop it. These plants are toxic to all species.

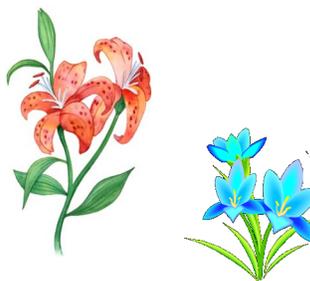

Japanese yew contains compounds that have a direct effect on the heart. The toxins can cause an irregular heartbeat or even stop the heart. All parts, except for the bright red berry, are toxic. Sudden death can result within hours of ingestion.

Castor beans contain ricin, which can be highly toxic. Ricin causes multiple organ failure. Ricin is found throughout the plant, but the highest level is found in the seeds. The seed coat must be damaged to release the toxins, so animals who swallow the seed whole may not get sick.

Autumn crocus contains chemotherapy-like compounds that attack rapidly dividing cells in the body. Ingestion can cause vomiting, diarrhea, weakness and possible death. Spring crocus is not toxic.

Hops are used in beer brewing. Ingestion of hops by dogs causes their body temperature to skyrocket. Signs can be seen within hours. Dogs become agitated and begin to pant. Their body temperature can get high enough to kill them.

Lilies: Easter lilies, tiger lilies rubrum or Japanese showy lilies and day lilies have been shown to cause kidney failure in cats. Even a few nibbles can cause kidney failure. Cats often vomit within a few hours and stop producing urine within 72 hours.

A LETTER TO ARF

Dear ARF friends,

My name is Tori. I think you already know a little bit about me—where I came from and how I was brought to ARF. That was back in October, and now I am six months old!

I am feeling very happy and grateful these days. My special Christmas gift was that I got a forever home and a new mom. Oh, and my very own Christmas stocking, too. (Actually, my mom says that I was her Christmas gift.) Anyway, I started the New Year with a whole new life—lots of people who love me (even godparents!), and four new kitty sisters. The oldest one is a calico who looks just like me! Another one is Josie—you may remember her from a couple years ago. She was rescued by ARF, too, with two broken legs. But she was very brave; and now she can run fast, as if there had never been a problem.

I have what they call a "problem" with my legs, too. My back ones forgot to grow paws on them; and the ones in the front tried to, but just couldn't finish. But my legs are strong; and I am very brave, just like Josie. So I can run fast, just like her. I can jump up a little ways on my hind legs, too. When Josie sits above me on the cat tree

I jump up and try to catch it. I can also chase the mousie toy that runs 'round in circles; and I really like to race after the red dot that the laser thing makes on the floor. Funny thing, though, I never seem to catch it. But I never try to jump up onto furniture because my legs just don't want me to do that. And I never try to climb on things because, well, I have only two claws—on each of my front minipaws. I mostly like to walk and run on the rugs and carpet. I can also get around on the tile floor, but one of my back legs doesn't work too well on that slippery stuff.

At night, I sleep in my cushy bed in the bathroom. During the day, I have a big pen filled with toys in the living room. I spend some time in there; but most of the time, my mom lets me explore my house. When I'm not exploring, I sometimes lie by my mom's feet while she sews or works on the computer. I sleep a little while I'm there, and I also nibble on her toes. I also like to just sit in my canvas cube and watch what goes on in my world. Believe me, I don't miss anything!

My mom says I'm a "perfect" little kitten. Hmmmeow, I do have to admit that I have the silkiest kitten fur, ever. And my eyes are the biggest kitten eyes, ever. My short, fluffy tail is the wiggliest kitten tail ever. And my sister Josie says that I am her most favorite little buddy, ever. So I guess maybe I am just about the most perfect little kitten. (Oh, I forgot to mention that I'm also very humble.)

I know for sure that I am one of the most lucky little kittens, ever, because I have so many friends who believe in me. So I thank you all—from the person who found me all alone and took me to the WCSPCA, to all of my ARF peeps (as far away as Ohio!) who have loved and supported me. Special thanks to Jayne and Howard, for letting me be their godkitten, and to my big sister Josie, who helps me every day to stay brave, humble—and mostly purrfect.

Love, Tori
